Currency Converter for Pokki is an easy-to-use and handy application designed to convert between currencies. Requirements: Well Hello you little rascal you know you shouldn't have left the house without telling me. Dear little rascal, please come over here and sit on my lap so I can give you a hug and tickle... 1.5 MB 45 K When you have a new pet, it can be a fun time. This cartoon character picture book will have your child giggling when he or she sees a favorite animal character. This...Q: Get the latest publication using a subset of fields I need to retrieve the latest publication using a subset of fields. Looking at the docs I can easily extract the Id from the first publication, however I can't find a way to get the latest Id from the table. I want to avoid having to create a case statement if possible. I'm hoping that there is a simple and elegant way to do this. The table I'm working with is called AD_PubChanges, and I'm trying to figure out how to get the latest publication Id (field PUBSUB_ID) for all the fields (PUBLISH_DATE, PUBLISH_INFO) that I'm using. Thanks! A: In your case, you can use a HAVING clause: `SELECT PUBSUB_ID FROM AD_PubChanges GROUP BY PUBSUB_ID HAVING MAX(PUBLISH_DATE) >= GETDATE();` Every so often, a developer creates a cool website. Then other developers follow suit, and we get a curated selection of websites that fill a particular niche or cater to a particular audience. This is why we love Github's Explore page. While the official Explore page tends to have only link to a handful of sites, the GitHub Explore page has a wealth of curated websites of all shapes and sizes. This post will provide you with the methodology to make your own Explore page for your Github project. 1. The official Explore page The official Explore page is great for a number of reasons. It allows Github users to easily sort the Explore page by different criteria including: Rank – What is the best ranked website on that page? Number of stars – What is the top starred 09e8f5149f
