newsletter preferences Theresa May has set out a new set of credentials for Conservative MPs who want to be her successor, after a senior Tory admitted she is ready to take on the post if asked. Mrs May was tipped to quit as soon as Brexit was completed on March 31, but Downing Street played down the prospect on Monday. Senior Tory Douglas Alexander urged the Prime Minister to give MPs more power to block “the unexpected”, especially when the result of the Brexit negotiations are unclear. He said: “We saw some very alarming behaviour from the Electoral Commission on Thursday. Of course, it is not up to the Electoral Commission to settle constitutional issues, but it does show a need for a more stable method of appointment. “If we continue to be confronted with the unexpected it will be necessary to give the right to block unexpected appointments to an elected MPs committee, which is governed by the party leader and would be chaired by the leader in such circumstances.” Mrs May met Jewish community leaders at the Cabinet Office and told them the Brexit negotiations would still be vital even if she leaves. It was not her last planned engagement of the day. She will meet CEOs of the big four accounting firms, who are usually among her highest-profile opponents, in Downing Street. She will be meeting them later.
