study the structure of the large conductance Ca^{2+} -activated K^{+} channel of the skeletal muscle of the African clawed frog. The single channel conductance was estimated to be at least 250 pS. The open time distributions were exponential with a mean open time of 0.1 ms. The channel conductance was found to be pH dependent; at less negative potentials (below -80 mV) the channel conductance decreased from about 300 pS to about 100 pS when the external pH was lowered from 7.8 to 6.8 . The outward tail current activated by hyperpolarization to membrane potentials greater than -90 mV and decayed to the
