that more regulations mean better outcomes. But a recent study of a Boulder-area wastewater treatment plant that has been in operation since the 1950s has yielded some unexpected results. The 40-year-old plant (which treats roughly 0.5 million gallons of liquid per day) needs a larger filter to keep contaminants such as copper, iron, lead, cadmium and sulfates from showing up in its discharge. A pilot project last year saw the installation of a $275,000 filter on the incoming water. The team at the sewage treatment works (STW) even expects a reduction in the plant's runoff. "But we're not nearly finished," says Dave 6d1f23a050
