The existing compressors were all aluminum and wouldn't fit into the new equipment. I have all the new compressors made (HBE32). The existing compressors were 1 1/4 inches across and I have 3 new compressors 1 1/2, 3 1/2 and 4 inches across to fit (I think. I don't have all the parts, or close). I have marked where I will need to cut one of the larger compressors to get it to fit. I'm trying to figure out which flange to remove. Both flanges are set back and have a 3 inch hole. The smaller one looks like this and the larger one looks like this Looking at them on the assembly, it seems the larger one is larger, but the larger one has a ledge and the smaller one does not. Would that be the difference? I'm pretty sure it's the large one, but looking at this picture I'm not sure. A: This is a 2 piece design. As a general rule, the smaller piece is the 'top' or the 'can' and the larger piece is the 'bottom'. Your picture shows the larger piece. Since they would both be on opposite sides of the assembly, it is the larger piece that is closest to the engine. [Cite as State v.
