MOSCOW: Russian Spetznaz troops have been granted permission to seize landing strips near rebel-held areas in eastern Ukraine as part of the build-up of forces ready to launch an operation to take the breakaway territory of Crimea under its control. Russia's defence minister said on Monday the move was part of a wider military build-up that increased the likelihood that the Kremlin will order an invasion of the Ukrainian region of Crimea. "From now on, the air and sea border with the Crimean Peninsula will be closed for inbound and outbound traffic," a senior defence ministry official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "All these actions are aimed at reinforcing our position on the border," the official added. Russia has massed more than 10,000 troops in Crimea since a hastily organised referendum on March 16 to annex the peninsula, which broke apart from Ukraine following Moscow's intervention in eastern Ukraine. In April, Russia backed a second Crimean referendum on independence from Ukraine, a move that alarmed the West and its allies in Kiev. The West opposes Russia's actions
